

About the Authors

Elizabeth Shanks Alexander, Assistant Professor at Smith College, teaches in the Program of Jewish Studies. She completed her doctoral work in Rabbinics at Yale University in 1998 and wrote a dissertation entitled “Study Practices that Made the Mishnah.” Her current research explores the role played by gender in Rabbinic oral tradition.

Dan Ben-Amos is Professor in both the Folklore and the Asian and Middle East Studies departments at the University of Pennsylvania. In addition to Jewish folklore, his research interests include African folklore, epics, folktales, myth, humor, and the history of folklore studies. Books he has written or edited include Cultural Memory and the Construction of Identity, Folklore Genres, and Sweet Words: Story-telling Events in Benin.

Yaakov Elman is Associate Professor of Judaic Studies at Yeshiva University. He has published research and scholarship on Talmudic and Jewish thought, including Authority and Tradition: Toseftan baraitot in Talmudic Babylonia, and has co-edited a volume on the transmission of Jewish tradition to be published by Yale University Press.

Steven D. Fraade is the Mark Taper Professor of the History of Judaism at Yale University. He is the author of From Tradition to Commentary: Torah and Its Interpretation in the Midrash Sifre to Deuteronomy and is currently working on a comparative cultural history of ancient Jewish legal discourse.

Martin Jaffee is currently Samuel and Althea Stroum Professor of Jewish Studies at the University of Washington, where he chairs the Comparative Religion Program. He has written extensively on questions of Rabbinic oral-literary culture and is completing a book under the working title Torah in the Mouth: The Transformation of Oral Tradition in Palestinian Judaism, ca. 200 BCE - 400 CE.
